

Hope new drugs will protect millions from HIV

British scientists are set to launch trials of anti-viral drugs that could save millions of people becoming infected with HIV each year, it emerged last night. A government-backed study by the Medical Research Council and London's Imperial College has developed microbicides that could provide a barrier to the transmission of the HIV virus during sex.

Read more...