

Traditional ways of fighting illness called inadequate

The number of women infected with HIV is rising in every region of the world, according to a new UN report released yesterday, and top AIDS officials said long-used strategies to help prevent the spread of the deadly disease among women are woefully inadequate. "If we let things go the way they are, there won't be any women tomorrow," said Gcebile Ndlovu, coordinator of the Southern Africa International Community of Women Living with HIV/AIDS.
