

On World AIDS Day, renewed calls for new strategies to stop the pandemic

Circumcision, microbicides and microfinance. These are just some of the most promising options being examined as potential ways to prevent AIDS. As World AIDS Day is marked Friday, some public health experts are saying the current focus on universal access to lifesaving antiretroviral drugs has had an unintended effect: sidelining prevention. Without a vaccine to stop the outbreak in its tracks, preventing new HIV infections is key to controlling the epidemic. Read more...
